HISTORY

Since being first chartered in 1937, the credit union has grown from $28,000 in assets and 170 members to more than $1.3 Billion in assets and approximately 108,243 members.

The credit union was originally organized as a Pan Am Employees Federal Credit Union, to serve the financial needs of employees of Pan American Refining Corporation of Texas City.

In 1947, the credit union expanded for the first time to include employees of Amoco Chemicals in Texas City, and Amoco (Pan American) subsidiary.

In 1955, the credit union changed its name to Amoco Federal Credit Union to correspond with the new name of its sponsor company, Amoco Oil Refinery. Two years later, and twenty years after organization, Amoco Federal Credit Union claimed $2.6 Million in assets and 3,100 members.

In 1998, British Petroleum (BP) and Amoco Oil merged into BP Amoco and as of 2004 it would be called BP. With that change Amoco Federal Credit Union made the choice to keep their name the same because it represented stability and familiarity in the community. The board and management decided to make only one minor change. The “Amoco” name was changed to represent an acronym, making it AMOCO (A Member Owned Cooperative Organization) Federal Credit Union.

Today, AMOCO Federal Credit Union includes a diversified membership that includes more than 560 local sponsor companies and organizations and approximately 108,243 members located throughout the country. Recognized as one of the largest credit unions in the Houston/Galveston area, AMOCO continues to grow in large part to the satisfaction and loyalty of members and the commitment of our volunteers and staff.

UNDERSTANDING THE DIFFERENCE

What's the difference between a bank and a credit union?

The answer: Membership. Credit unions are not-for-profit, cooperative financial institutions that are owned and operated by its members. They exist to provide a safe, convenient place for members to save money and to get loans at reasonable rates.

Like credit unions, banks accept deposits and make loans – but unlike credit unions, they are in business to make a profit. Banks are owned by groups of stockholders whose interests include earning a healthy return on their investments.

The Federal Credit Union Act of 1934 defines a credit union as, “A cooperative association organized for the purpose of promoting thrift among its members and creating a source of credit for provident and productive purposes.”

Credit unions look like banks because credit unions and banks offer many of the same products and services: checking and savings accounts, money market accounts, certificates of deposit, loans for homes and autos, credit cards, automated teller machines and online banking, among many other financial products and services.

But membership makes the credit union difference:

- Credit unions are governed by a volunteer board of directors which act in the members' best interest.
- Because of the member governance and ownership structure, Congress exempts credit unions from federal income taxes, which could only be paid from member reserves.
- Excess earnings by credit unions are reinvested so that its members can enjoy the benefit of lower loan rates, higher deposit rates, service improvements, bonus dividends and significantly lower fees.
- Credit unions educate members and non-members about sensible money management to help improve members' financial condition and to help reduce the costs of financial literacy to society.
- Membership into a credit union is open to a defined “field of membership”. At AMOCO, that means all employees and members affiliated with any one of our 560+ businesses, organizations or associations that have elected to become an AMOCO Select Partner are eligible, as well as family members of anyone who qualifies under the above guidelines.
- Credit Unions provide a valuable alternative offering advantages that are unique in the financial services industry.
